Where the Silver River Ends | Anna Quon

Lyrical realism meets family drama meets sparkling folktale

---

Joan, a Chinese Canadian English teacher flees Budapest for a fresh start—and her journey unfurls into a tale of youthful hope in the face of systemic oppression and racial violence, of family reconciliation and the magic of coincidence, and what happens when we gather the courage to step out of the current and make our own way in the world.

Praise for Anna Quon's previous novels:

"An empathetic coming-of-age story about the redemptive power of love." — Globe and Mail on Low

"Quon writes with a great deal of humour, and she spins a good yarn." — Quill & Quire on Migration Songs

Middle-aged, mixed-race, mad writer Anna Quon is the author of the novels Migration Songs, shortlisted for the Dartmouth Book Award, and Low. She lives in Halifax. Read more at annaquon.ca.

Harbour Grids | Zane Koss

A long poem in four parts that investigates ideas of community and belonging

Beginning as a meditation on the surface of New York Harbor, the poem radiates outward through issues of labour, location, history, belonging, and subjectivity. How do we experience our complex relations to the world we live in?

Zane Koss is a poet, translator, and scholar. Born and raised in Invermere, B.C., he lives between Brooklyn, NY, and Guelph, ON. He has previously published five chapbooks of poetry with above/ground press, Simulacrum Press, The Blasted Tree, and Publication Studio Guelph, and has also taught at McGill University, where he completed a Master's in Canadian poetry.
